Blobbering is a favorite activity for many of the kids who spend a week or two at Casowasco each summer. Blobbering is simple. You climb to the top of a very tall tower and then jump onto a very large inflated thing called a blob. You then climb to the end of the blob — well, almost to the end, and then you sit and wait until the next person jumps onto the blob.

Instantly, you are propelled into the air for a quick flight, then you land in the water, swim back to the dock, and prepare for another trip to the top of the tower. Sound like fun? I have never blobbed. I will never blob. If I were to climb the 20 or so steps to the top, I would land on the blob only if I passed out and fell forward. It is left mostly to people between the ages of 12 and 20, with an occasional counselor or site director taking their turn. On Saturday the upper age limit was raised when one older adult (who works in the office of the Bishop!) took on the dare of a half dozen or so photographers and others standing on the shoreline shouting words of encouragement. She did a great job, this unnamed assistant to Bishop Fisher. Having a great time - be back soon!

PS - Great job, Christine — and we're all pretty happy that you finally made it to Casowasco
